Approach

Practical tools: I give quick theory and ideas and the attendees immediately do an exercise to try it out.

Peer to Peer pitching: attendees get the chance to try out specific parts of their pitch with various people, so that they hear different types of feedback each time they try. This helps get closer to creating a pitch that works with real audiences.

Quick, time-pressured exercises: the clock is ticking on-screen, since pitching is about telling the story in a limited time. They go through a process that they can replicate in their own time for every future pitch.

Content

Importance of Audience and Objective

Delivery - examples and exercises on body language and voice, so they can tell the story with certainty and passion.
